Facebook giving away AI tools used for video

By Jeremy Kahn

Facebook is now allowing its users to freely download and use the same artificial intelligence tools it uses to make key improvements to the social network's video and notification features as well as its Messenger messaging app.

The software, which Facebook calls Horizon, will be available on the code repository GitHub, the company said in a blog post Thursday. GitHub is owned by Microsoft.

Facebook used this set of tools internally to optimize how 360-degree videos are displayed on the social network, taking into account such factors as the available bandwidth and how much of the video has already been buffered.
